WILSON COMPLETES PEACE ANSWER

U. S. TROOPS IN 3 BATTLES

4 MILLION N. E. GAIN IN LOAN

Total for 8th Day $17,461,000, But Speed Is Needed to Get $300,000,000 More

The falling off in the Fourth Liberty Loan, due in part to the German peace camouflage, was partly made up today when the day's subscriptions in New England reached $17,461,000, which is a gain of about $4,000,000 over the preceding 24 hours.

Heroic efforts will be necessary, however, to bring the subscriptions up to the normal point if this section of the country is to go substantially over the top.

New England's total this morning was practically $200,000,000, on the tabulation of reports at the Federal Reserve Bank.

The total subscriptions for the country, announced from Washington up to today, were $1,406,051,000.

$300,000,000 STILL NEEDED.

The exact figures for the eight days of the New England campaign showed $199,065,000, or very close to twenty-five million dollars a day. This leaves $300,000,000 to be secured in eleven working days left, or over $27,000,000 per day.

The number of subscribers for the day was 38,502, a total of 269,171. In

Paris, Sept. 13. (by mail).—"Will the Irish fight?"

The same old answer may be made. They will. It can be made on the records of two famous Irish-American regiments in France. It is a record that makes men of Irish blood hold their heads high. It is a record that betters the brightest page of America's most glorious military annals.

These two regiments, one used to be the old Ninth Massachusetts and the other the Fighting Sixty-ninth of New York, were in every bad scrap the American army has been in. The tales of their prowess are just now filtering back to Paris. They may be told because the censor at headquarters has now ruled that regiments may be named for their part in such fighting as preceded that on the River Vesle.

The Ninth and the Sixty-ninth were in almost all of it. The story does not come from official reports. It comes from the lips of two men, one a doctor in the Ninth and the other a chaplain in the Sixty-ninth, who saw what they relate. These two have seen many soldiers die. They know what bravery and courage and cheerfulness are

CHARGES PLAZA HOTEL BROKE LIQUOR RULE

Victor A. Heath of the Emergency Health Committee went to Roxbury Court today to apply for a warrant against the management of the Plaza Hotel on Columbus avenue on a charge of violation of the order of Health Commissioner William C. Woodward against sale of liquor at open bars during the epidemic of influenza.

Mr. Heath visited the Plaza yesterday. He declares that he saw drinks sold over the open bar.

It was intimated, as Mr. Heath was leaving the city health department for Roxbury courthouse, that complaints against other places would follow.

Conviction on such complaint carries a fine of $100.

Mr. Heath is backed up in his stand by Alexander A. Whiteside, Boston's corporation counsel, and Health Commissioner Woodward. He conferred with these officials before deciding to make complaint. Mr. Whiteside said he was empowered, under Chapter 75, Section 65, of the Revised Laws, to prosecute.

The final word from Mr. Whiteside and Dr. Woodward was: "Go through with it." Mr. Heath started forthwith.

Troopship Torpedoed Because Navy Man Talked Too Much

By International News Service.

New York, Oct. 8.—An American troopship was torpedoed as the result of information concerning the sailing date of a sister troopship obtained from a petty officer in the U. S. Navy by Otto Loehmer, an alien, who supplied the navy man with liquor, according to a charge made by Lieutenant Murray of the United States Army intelligence.

The charge was made at the arraignment of Loehmer and Miss Margaret Sullivan, his alleged accomplice, before United States Commissioner Stanton. Loehmer was held on a technical charge of having unlawfully supplied officers and men of the United States Army and Navy with liquor. It is stated by intelligence officers, however, that a much graver charge probably will be made against Loehmer.

Evidence was introduced purporting to show that Loehmer had intrigued, either with the knowing or unwitting connivance of the Sullivan girl, to lure American officers and men into her home and give them liquor until they talked unreservedly and supplied them with valuable military secrets.

As a specific instance, Lieutenant Murray told of a drunken petty officer in the U. S. Navy giving out information concerning the sailing of a United States troopship, in the presence of both Loehmer and Miss Sullivan. This information, according to the lieutenant, led to the torpedoing of a sister troopship in the convoy.

The petty officer, according to the lieutenant, is under arrest in France and will be returned to this country for court martial.

Miss Sullivan was paroled with a request by the commissioner to appear before him later and reveal everything she knows concerning the activities of Loehmer.

REGRETS FAKE EXTRA ON N. Y. AIR RAID

By International News Service.

Springfield, Oct. 8.—The local chairman of the Liberty Loan Committee today publicly expressed the deepest regret of the committee that its "extra" newspaper, containing an account of the alleged bombing of New York City by German airplanes had caused physical and mental discomfort to many of Springfield's citizens.

The "extra" wa sissued Saturday evening under the auspices of the loan publicity committee as one of its "mystery stunts" to stimulate bond sales. It printed 25,000 copies of a paper called the "Evening Telegram" and distributed them throughout the city.

The account of the alleged bombing of New York said that thousands of women and children had been slaughtered, and that the city was in flames.

A picture of the Woolworth building in ruins was shown on the first page and one item dated Saybrook, Ct., said the German machines were headed for Springfield. Many women fainted when they read the fake paper, and the issuing of it was condemned by the local press.

NEW ALLIED DRIVE NEAR ST. QUENTIN

London, Oct. 8 (1:50 p. m.).—The Turkish Cabinet has resigned, says a special dispatch to the Star this afternoon. Great excitement is reported in Constantinople.

The imminence of a coup d'etat is being openly discussed in Vienna, and it is declared that it will lead to sensational developments in both Austria and Germany, says a Central News dispatch.

By FRANK CHARLTON
International News Service Cable Editor.

American and British troops began a new attack today between St. Quentin and Cambrai, driving through the gaps that had been torn in the Hindenburg line in that sector.

A heavy rain was falling when the assault began, but despite this obstacle Field Marshal Haig reported that satisfactory progress was made in the initial onset. The Anglo-Americans are striking in the direction of the two German strongholds at Le Cateau and Bohain.

Advances were made, also, on two other fronts on the western battlefield.

The French gained over a mile of additional territory, taking two more villages, while the Americans, pushing northward along the Meuse River, have reached the outskirts of Brieulles-sur-Meuse.

Americans are taking part in all three of the drives that were underway today, attacking with the British on the Cambrai-St. Quentin front; with the French in Champagne, and between the Argonne forest and the Meuse River.

Powerful German counter attacks were battered against the Americans, but all were broken up. At the few points where the Germans succeeded in getting into American positions the enemy were either killed in hand-to-hand fighting or taken prisoner.

Brieulles-sur-Meuse is under heavy American artillery fire and is being battered to pieces. The town lies about 15½ miles north of Verdun, and is on the road running northeast from Nantillois.

French forces that captured Berry-au-Bac on the Aisne River north of Rheims have extended their gains by reaching Conde-sur-Suippe.

This gives the French plenty of

French Capture Two More Towns Northeast of Rheims and Cross the River Aisne

Foch Cutting German Flanks; Von Mudra's Army Narrowly Escapes from Allied Pincers

By JOHN McHUGH STUART,
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

Paris, Oct. 8.—The fruits of Marshal Foch's masterly strategy are accumulating.

French military experts today expressed the opinion that the Germans will regret that they did not retreat on a larger scale when the strategical situation was opportune.

The allies are cutting into the flanks of the German army and are menacing vital lines of communication.

Swift advances of the allies are imperilling various groups of the German army. There was an example of this on the Champagne front within the past few days when General von Mudra's army was nearly surrounded before it could retire to safety.

WILSON'S REPLY TO THE KAISER IS FINISHED

Document Approved by Secretary Lansng and Colonel House in Conference

ment for the press "about 4 o'clock this afternoon."

NOTE ON ITS WAY.

The secretary refused to make any other statement concerning the note. It was accepted, however, that Secretary Lansing would make the necessary arrangements during the afternoon for transmitting the note to the Swiss Charge d'Affairs for transmission to Berlin; to the Swedish Minister for transmission to Vienna, and to the Spanish Ambassador for tranmission to Constantinople, should the latter in the meanwhile deliver the Turkish note reported to be enroute to him.

Officials explained that it would be necessary that the note actually be started on its way to the enemy capitals before it could be made public here. They refused point blank to say whether the promised statement by Secretary Lansing would contain a copy of the President's reply or whether they would wait until the note reached Berlin and Vienna before making it public. It was generally believed that the note would be made available for public consumption here and in the several Entente capitals as soon as possible.

SENT TO ALLIED CAPITALS.

Secretary Lansing sent for Philip Patchin, chief of the State Department's Foreign Intelligence Bureau, as soon as he left the President. It was assumed that Mr. Patchin would take charge of transmitting the text of the note to the various allied countries at once.

Officialdom and the diplomatic corps, having accepted the belief that the reply must be an unqualified rejection of an armistice and a discussion of terms based on the President's public utterances, confined itself to speculating whether the reply would make plain to the Central Powers exactly what guarantees are necessary before the United States and its allies will talk peace.

WILSON ABSENT FROM LINKS.

President Wilson again denied himself his early morning exercise on the golf links today and remained closeted in his study in the White House alone. He had before him all of the confidential information gathered by the State Department dealing with the German and Austrian situation.

An official, in commenting on the great task which the President has in preparing a reply to the Austrian and German communications, said:

"There is no doubt of what the President will say, but he must be unusually careful in just how he says it in the present instance. This time, for the first time in the war, the President will be addressing the entire peoples of the world. His reply will be published in Germany and in Austria complete. It also will be published in all entente and neutral countries.

"The United States has always taken the lead in any movement for good that comes out of this war. The United States today stands firmly for peace—but it must be a real peace, a peace which will assure to all of the peoples of the world that there never again can be another war started through the whim of outrageous autocracy.

WILL WEIGH WORDS CAREFULLY.

"Therefore, the President is carefully weighing his words. Far more depends on this reply than most people realize. There must be no 'made in Germany' peace, of course. But the President may be depended upon not to shut the door against the lasting peace that must follow this war."

Officials also commented on the apparent effort of the Austro-Hungarian leaders to make it appear that the present peace move was not forced by military necessity. The Vienna version, that the peace offer was "the last link of the 1916 policy," caused much amusement here when it was contrasted with the address of Count Tisza at the reform congress in Budapest, when he boldly declared that "Bulgaria's treachery and the situation on the western front led us to decide, together with Germany, to undertake the peace step."

Officials pointed out that this indicated rather conclusively that the Austrian leaders were badly divided at the present time.

INDEMNITIES DEMANDED.

Many of the messages received urged the President to demand a change in the governments of Germany and Austria-Hungary. Others, many of which reached the Senate and House leaders, favored complete indemnifications for all peoples who have suffered from Germany's ruthless policy of destruction. Not a single message received in official quarters carried the slightest sentiment in favor of accepting the Teutonic suggestions.

MEN OF OLD 9TH MAKE GOOD IN FIERCE FIGHTS

Lieut. Kelleher Tells How One Lad Killed Six Germans Before He Was Felled

that the Irish boys of his regiment, the boys of Boston, South Boston, Roxbury, Cambridge and Charlestown, fought with the cool courage that held the fire on Bunker Hill until those Americans of an earlier day "saw the whites of their eyes." They show that these boys—and most of them were mere boys—died face to the front, a grim smile on their lips, fighting, doing their soldiers' duty to the last breath of ebbing life. Each heartbeat of the all-too-few left throbbed but to one purpose—to fight. No man of the Ninth died, says Lieutenant Kelleher, without taking toll and more of enemy lives with him.

Just now the names of these heroes may not be mentioned. But "Kelly and Burke and Shea" are there, all of them, and many more. Lieutenant Kelleher says nothing of his own gallantry. But his stories show that he, too, served. He was not called on for the supreme sacrifice. But he offered his life a thousand times on first aid dressing expeditions to the farthest outposts and beyond.

SIX LAND GERMANS.

"I'd been told there was a wounded man in an advanced traverse," he says. "I crawled slowly up to get him. I heard his labored breathing in the lulls of the gunfire. And then I rounded the corner of the trench. There he sat, propped against the wall. His breath came in tearing gasps, and with each one the blood gushed from his chest, for he had been shot through the lungs. He was a boy I had known all my life.

"'They got you bad, Pack,' I said, as I tried to help him.

"'They sure did, Sime,' he replied. 'But looka there.'

"I followed the wave of the empty pistol he still held in his hand, and there stretched across the opposite parapet were six dead Germans, one for every shot in his gun. They had got him only when the gun had emptied. I stopped the bleeding as best I could and we got him back to an ambulance. But he died four hours later. I guess his life was well paid for.

"It was this same sharp raid of the Germans that produced one of the coolest bits of desperate courage I ever saw. One of our boys had been captured by three Germans and he was being led off as they retreated, one on either side of him and one behind. Suddenly one of our shells lit within a few yards of the party. The three Germans ducked. I thought at first our boy had. But, no, he had dropped a hand grenade directly at his own feet and those of his captors—and the three Germans were killed.

SMILED AT HIM.

"I got there quickly afterward to where he lay. He smiled up at me. Yes, he smiled, though his arm and half his side had been blown off.

"'God! boy,' I said, horrified, 'why did you do that?'

"'Saw me get 'em, did you, Doc?' he answered.

"'Yes, but'— I didn't know what to say as I tried to dress that frightful wound.

"'Well, doctor,' he said gravely, 'I'd been to communion this morning and I guess I was ready to die. But I wasn't ready to go to German. They searched me for grenades when they got me, the three of them, and they took those out of my bag and out of my side pocket. But I always carry one tucked into my pants when I go out here, just in case of—well, anything like this. And when those three Germans ducked it came through my mind a lot quicked than I can tell it that three dead Germans and one dead American was a lot more on our side of the score than three live Germans and an American as good as dead in Berlin. So I let her go.'

"He tried to raise his head and look around.

"'Never mind, boy, you got them all,' I assured him.

"'Any—any chance for me, doc?' he said.

SILVER CRUCIFIX.

"I didn't answer and he knew. His remaining hand crept beneath his blood-soaked tunic, gripped something tight and stayed there. After a moment he spoke again.

"'Doc,' he said, 'you know all the boys around our square. I wish they could know I was game.

"'And, doc,' his voice was weaker, 'will you—will you tell my mother I had—I had this when—I went.'

"Slowly his hand came out; slowly it opened; that boy's hand strangely old and worn with the bloodstains and grime. Slowly it opened and there in the blackened palm glistened a tiny, bright silver crucifix. He was dead."

JONES TELLS SOURCES OF BREWERS' CHARGES

Washington, Oct. 8.—Urging that the scope of the Senate investigation of political activities of the organized brewing interests of the United States be not limited to charges made by A. Senator Jones pointed out that the investigation resolution, of which he was the author, specificially authorized the committee to call upon A. Mitchell Palmer, Attorney-General Gregory and all United States District Attorneys to produce all documents in their possession tending to support the charges cited in the resolution. Copies of the official bulletin of the National German-American Alliance in the possession of Gustavus Ohlinger would prove, he said, that the United States Brewers' Association "contributed to the National German-American Alliance and financed its official organ after the sinking of the Lusitania and other similar German atrocities."

YANKEES SAVED FROM TRAP IN ARGONNE

Americans had to go forward through dense undergrowth. The men of the battalion noticed Germans slipping to the rear, but believed they would be "mopped up" by the second American line.

The enemy groups succeeded in holding up the assault of the second American column, with the result that the battalion was cut off.

When the advanced elements were sent backs to maintain contact with the main body they encountered the enemy in their rear.

The Germans took shelter in an evacuated trench system that the Americans had passed over, using it as a base of resistance. The Boches brought up machine guns from dugouts, while airplanes carried them food, ammunition and medical supplies. Carrier pigeons were used for communication purposes.

REPEATED ASSAULTS FAIL.

The Americans fought continually to prevent capture. A half-dozen times the main American force tried to hack its way through to relieve the surrounded battalion.

The ocupation of Hill No. 244 yesterday permitted direct machine-gun fire against the Germans. The American advance northward then released the battalion. The Americans who had been surrounded for over three days then turned on the Boches who had formerly been besieging them and captured many of them.

American forces advancing up the Meuse valley have reached the southwestern outskirts of Brieulles, thirteen miles north of Verdun. The town is honeycombed with machine guns. Observers counted sixteen machine guns in a single building. American artillery is bombing the town and the buildings are crumbling to pieces under our big gun fire.

NOTHING IS TOO GOOD IN FRANCE FOR YANKEES WHO SAVED PARIS

"AMERICA HAS DELIVERED THE GOODS," IS SENTIMENT IN ALLIED CAPITALS

By ERNEST P. ORR.

Who since 1916 has been manager of the International News Service in Paris, who has been on every fighting front in France and Belgium and who has seen every angle of the German, from his hour of victory to his present hour of menacing defeat. Mr. Orr has just arrived from Paris.

New York, Oct. 8.—America has delivered the goods and the whole world now recognizes it, Kaisers Bill and Karl included. In Paris, London and Rome it is freely admitted the Yanks saved Paris. That's a real compliment. The "advance" of the German army on Berlin and the peace wails of both Kaisers Bill and Karl constitute even a better one.

And with it all there has returned to the American soldier in France the great popularity that was his upon our first arrival there — thereafter slightly dimmed by a too strenuous press campaign in which it was rashly stated our doughboys would immediately take their places in the fighting line, relieving some of the older French classes.

LED TO EXPECT TOO MUCH.

The French were led to expect too much from their own press. At a time when General Pershing frankly confided to the correspondents he thought he would be doing well if we had 100,000 men in France by January 1, 1918, France—that is, the French public—was looking forward to the immediate advent of a huge American army.

As month after month rolled by and nothing happened, so far as the actual entry of American troops into the line, doubts began to be expressed. Skeptics were inclined to believe our promised army was just a little bit of American "bluff."

Their skepticism really had quite some justification. They had been told to expect so much and they saw so little, understood so little of the tremendous preliminary work that must be accomplished before an army of any magnitude could be landed.

LONG SUSPENSE FOR FRANCE.

The first troops landed in June, and it was November before they entered the trenches, and then only for additional training. It was January before the first division went into the trenches for good, but it was a long period of waiting for tired, nerve-racked France, particularly after what the papers had stated.

But that's all changed now. Everywhere the "doughboy" is acclaimed as a hero and a deliverer. People on the boulevards of blase, sophisticated, war-hardened Paris will stop and cheer a bunch of the boys passing in an auto truck. The individual soldier receives a cheery nod or bright smile from the ordinary passerby with a not infrequent "Vive l'Amerique."

It is the same in the smaller cities and country districts. Nothing is too good for the Yank. He's the darling of the populace, and as for the French poilu, he's the idol of his eye.

FRANKLIN PARK YIELDS THE CHILDREN RICH HARVEST

You do not have to live in Aroostook to raise potatoes.

That fact was established today at Franklin Park, where the children of the Christopher Gibson section of the public schools dug their war gardens, with the result that about 300 families are benefited with 900 pecks of the "precious."

Brothers and sisters of the schools were there with their mothers and fathers with home-made carts, wheelbarrows, baby carriages and doll carriages to take home their harvest.

The young farmers doing their bit to win the war were there with rakes, hoes, spades and forks to dig the result of their labors, and each child harvested an average of three pecks on a lot ten by twenty-five feet.

The planting was done under the direction of the Boston Public Safety Committee, and the children of the Lewis, Roger Wolcott, Marshall, Francis Parkman and Robert G. Shaw schools brought home their harvest today.

Every day this week children of various school districts of Boston will reap the harvest of their labors.

Elsa Naber and her young sister, Ruth, winners of horticultural prizes, were the potato winners today, harvesting a bushel on their plot.

Beans, Swiss chard, beets and cabbages were also harvested by the children of the Roxbury district, and among those digging the Winter vegetables were Jeanette and Ida Leipson, Irene MacKenzie, Lillian Zalkind, Jennie Friedman, Hilda Pinkus, Margaret O'Brien, Frank Walsh, Samuel Maister, Paul Beach, John Allison, Harold Helpin and Barrett Stoler.

RUINED RHEIMS DESERTED CITY OF THE DEAD

By DAMON RUNYON.

Amid the ruins of Rheims, Oct. 8.—I entered Rheims with the first party of staff officers to walk into the deserted cathedral city, immediately after we had received the news of the enemy's retreat. [illegible] General von Mudra's army was withdrawn from the forts of [illegible], Witry and Nogent-l'Abbesse, where the German batteries had dominated the city.

The roads leading into Rheims were still barricaded with barbed wire. Not a living human being was found in the town, which the Germans had been continually flooding with gas. The fumes still hung heavy in the half-wrecked buildings and other low-lying places.

Among the shelled ruins of a public school I found five gas masks. These had belonged to the pupils before the city was evacuated last May, when all civilians wore gas masks.

Corpses of the last soldiers and civilians killed while leaving the city were still lying in the streets. Dead horses lay everywhere.

Later I explored an eastern suburb, Cernay-les-Rheims, which the enemy had occupied for four years. I examined some German sharpshooters' nests, whose snipers had picked off the people walking in the streets of Rheims.

The former German trenches were littered with thousands of empty champagne bottles, looted in the vaults of the surrounding country.

Rheims was liberated Saturday after three-quarters of the city had been encircled since July. The seizure of the Blanc Mont heights by our troops threatened the Germans with being cut off from their rear communications.

COMPLETE LIST OF NUMBERS AFFECTING NEW ENGLAND MEN

HOW TO DETERMINE YOUR PLACE IN LINE

The master draft lists by which the order for liability to military service of registrants is established by local draft boards have arrived in Boston. For the purpose of convenience the Boston AMERICAN has prepared the following list, given in the order drawn, all the numbers up to 7181.

That number, held by a registrant under the Quincy draft board, is the highest in New England and no number above it affects any man in the six States.

When you have found your number count its numerical position in the group of hundreds in which it appears. Then add by hundreds the groups above it. The result will be your order number. If the total number of registrants in your district is 4,000 eliminate all numbers above that or whatever the highest number of registrants may be.

Draft boards in calling men for service eliminate all above you not in the first class and all registrants from thirty-seven to forty-five inclusive, as the latter class has not received questionnaires.

How to Find Your Serial Number in the Draft

Find your serial number. Cross out all numbers before it higher than the highest registration number of your district. Count the remainder. The result will be your order number.

Draft boards will further eliminate the numbers of men aged from thirty-seven to forty-five, inclusive, and those of men not in the first class.

TELLS DYSPEPTICS WHAT TO EAT

Avoid Indigestion, Sour Acid Stomach, Heartburn, Gas On Stomach, Etc.

Indigestion and practically all forms of stomach trouble, say medical authorities, are due nine times out of ten to an excess of hydrochloric acid in the stomach. Chronic "acid stomach" is exceedingly dangerous and sufferers should do either one of two things.

Either they can go on a limited and often disagreeable diet, avoiding foods that disagree with them, that irritate the stomach and lead to excess acid secretion or they can eat as they please in reason and make it a practice to counteract the effect of the harmful acid and prevent the formation of gas, sourness or premature fermentation by the use of a little Bisurated Magnesia at their meals.

There is probably no better, safer or more reliable stomach antacid than Bisurated Magnesia and it is widely used for this purpose. It has no direct action on the stomach and is not a digestant. But a teaspoonful of the powder or a couple of five grain tablets taken in a little water with the food will neutralize the excess acidity which may be present and prevent its further formation. This removes the whole cause of the trouble and the meal digests naturally and healthfully without need of pepsin pills or artificial digestants.

Get a few ounces of Bisurated Magnesia from any reliable druggist. Ask for either powder or tablets. It never comes as a liquid, milk or citrate and in the bisurated form is not a laxative. Try this plan and eat what you want at your next meal and see if this isn't the best advice you ever had on "what to eat."

BE PRETTY! TURN GRAY HAIR DARK

Try Grandmother's old Favorite Recipe of Sage Tea and Sulphur

Almost everyone knows that Sage Tea and Sulphur, properly compounded, brings back the natural color and lustre to the hair when faded, streaked or gray. Years ago the only way to get this mixture was to make it at home, which is mussy and troublesome. Nowadays, by asking at any drug store for "Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound," you will get a large bottle of this famous old recipe, improved by the addition of other ingredients, at a small cost.

Don't stay gray! Try it! No one can possibly tell that you darkened your hair, as it does it so naturally and evenly. You dampen a sponge or soft brush with it and draw this through your hair, taking one small strand at a time; by morning the gray hair disappears, and after another application or two, your hair becomes beautifully dark, glossy and attractive.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Compound is a delightful toilet requisite for those who desire dark hair and a youthful appearance. It is not intended for the cure, mitigation or prevention of disease.—Advertisement.

SUGGEST XMAS GIFTS FOR U. S. MEN OVERSEAS

What is your boy "over there" going to get for Christmas?

When "Do Your Christmas Shopping Early" is the slogan for home gifts it is high time we were getting about the business of packing our soldiers' boxes. We are told that all boxes must be at the receiving station in New York by November 15. Therefore let us consider what we shall put in them.

What would he rather have?

"Tobacco and candy," says Major Michael J. Moore, assistant chief of staff, Department of the Northeast. "And if there's any extra room, a few khaki colored handkerchiefs."

"A pack of cards, tobacco, a puzzle, a fountain pen and some good reading material" is the suggestion of Chief Clerk J. S. Wood, of the Judge Advocate's Office, Department of the Northeast.

What is YOUR suggestion?

Write it to the Christmas Editor, Boston AMERICAN, No. 80 Summer street, and give other friends of soldier boys the benefit of your ideas. The AMERICAN will gladly publish suggestions from readers.

ATLANTIC YOUTH WINS SECOND LIEUTENANCY

Lieut. MacMahon, who is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William MacMahon of No. 6 Walker place, Atlantic, graduated from Quincy High School in '15. During his two years at Technology he was prominent in track events, and it was while attending a meet in Philadelphia that he enlisted.

STOP DANDRUFF! HAIR GETS THICK, WAVY, BEAUTIFUL

Girls! Draw a cloth through your hair and double its beauty.

Spend a few cents! Dandruff vanishes and hair stops coming out.

To be possessed of a head of heavy, beautiful hair; soft, lustrous, fluffy, wavy and free from dandruff, is merely a matter of using a little Danderine.

It is easy and inexpensive to have nice, soft hair and lots of it. Just get a small bottle of Knowlton's Danderine now—all drug stores recommend it—apply a little as directed, and within ten minutes there will be an appearance of abundance, freshness, fluffiness and an incomparable gloss and lustre, and try as you will, you can not find a trace of dandruff or falling hair; but your real surprise will be after about two weeks' use, when you will see new hair—fine and downy at first—yet—but really new hair—sprouting out all over your scalp. Danderine is, we believe, the only sure hair grower, destroyer of dandruff and cure for itchy scalp, and it never fails to stop falling hair at once.

If you want to prove how pretty and soft your hair really is, moisten a cloth with a little Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair—taking one small strand at a time. Your hair will be soft, glossy and beautiful in just a few moments—a delightful surprise awaits everyone who tries this.—Advertisement.

State Women's Committee Reports $6,332,050 Total, Which Includes Boston

Mrs. Barrett Wendell, chairman of the Women's Loan Committee for Massachusetts, reports returns as slow in coming in, but totalling to date $6,332,050, including Boston.

Subscriptions from New Bedford this morning totalled $147,000. Holyoke has secured $94,600. Needham $121,300. Bristol County totals $279,000, divided among the towns as follows: Dighton $1,050, Easton $82,300, Fairhaven $24,550; Freetown $18,450, Mansfield 13,050, Norton $7,300, Somerset $350, Swanzea $13,400, Taunton $118,550.

Subscriptions aggregating $625,000 have been secured by the woman's committee of Somerville, in charge of Mrs. George C. Brewer. At headquarters yesterday afternoon Mrs. Brewer reported that they had pledges in sight to bring them very close to their quota. At the request of Charles F. Clarke, superintendent of schools, the teachers have done active work in tabulating reports since the closing of the schools.

ITALIANS SHOW PATRIOTISM.

The women of Bridgewater are distributing a circular letter, an extract of which reads: "We can't all fight, we can't all demolish a machine-gun nest, we can't all lead a charge, but we can all stand behind the men who do these things. We can furnish the money for food, clothing, ammunition, and we will." The letter is signed by Mrs. Robert W. McLean, chairman, and Annie Gilbert Copeland, publicity chairman.

The Italian committee of the West End, in charge of Miss Theresa A. Dacey, have already secured subscriptions amounting to $14,000. They expect to secure $100,000 within the next two weeks.

Barnstable County, Miss Lucia Howard chairman, has secured subscriptions totalling $78,900. The town of Barnstable has $22,800 of this to its credit, and includes besides subscriptions of $20,000 raised in the village of Barnstable, $1,000 from West Barnstable, $650 from Cummaquid, $600 from Centerville and $550 from Osterville. Chatham reports $24,500, Falmouth $17,350, Wellfleet $4,050, Harwich $3,850, Yarmouthport $3,800, Sandwich $2,550.

Mrs. Clarence W. Clark, chairman for the woman's committee for Malden, reports the sale of 163 bonds, aggregating $29,300.

The Harvard woman's committee has $5,000 to its credit as the result of the first week's work. Mrs. H. B. Boyd is chairman.

HARTFORD WOMEN HUSTLING

The Hartford women's committee, Mrs. Richard G. Bissell, chairman, has thirty-one sub-committees, which total 1085 women constantly working to sell bonds as against 700 women in the last campaign. The children and teachers from twenty-six schools are also working under the woman's committee, and sold during the first week $364,100 worth, as against $282,450 for the entire campaing of the Third Loan.

Buttons are given to all children who get subscriptions, bearing the slogan "I have sold a Liberty Bond, Fourth Loan," and have been a great success as the children are very eager to get them.

With $924,700 to their credit for the first week of the campaign, and nearly as much more in prospect, as the counties which have reported have been only for the town or city where the chairman lives, Maine women have reason to feel that they are measuring up well, as application blanks are still lacking in some of the towns. Saturday's total alone was $228,100. County chairmen have been instructed by Mrs. Grace A. Wing, executive chairman, to speed up laggards, as Maine must go over the top along with the rest of the First District. Monday's record added $96,650, making the total to date $1,021,350.

GOOD RHODE ISLAND REPORTS

Encouraging reports come from the first day's work of the women's committee of Rhode Island, Mrs. Walter A. Peck, chairman, no subscriptions being taken in Providence the first week, which was given over to publicity. In addition the banks have reported subscriptions by women taken at the bank without solicitation amounting to $383,700; full amount of women's subscriptions to date, $781,950.

Miss Caroline Hazard, for years president of Wellesley College, is publicity chairman for the town of South Kingston, R. I., and has contributed to the literature of the loan a stirring marching song.

Monday's returns from the Vermont women's committee, Mrs. Edward Curtis Smith, chairman, give Caledonia County, $42,600, Bennington, $21,000; Washington, $14,400; Chittenden, $7,100; Essex, $4,200; Lamoille, $1,050. Total for October 7, $96,450; total to date, $1,537,280.

GIVE BLOOD TO HASTEN SUPPLY OF SERUM

Six little drops of blood are being contributed to the cause of humanity by each policeman, fireman and doctor who visits the Tufts College Medical School in Huntington avenue to be inoculated with Dr. Timothy Leary's vaccine for the prevention of influenza.

Nurses, too, are asked to give a little bit of life fluid to the cause.

Humanized vaccine is the basis of Dr. Leary's preventive; at least, without human blood this particular vaccine could not be made. Dr. Leary and his assistants have been unable to supply the demand for the vaccine, and for that reason the public cannot be taken care of at present. Later, it is hoped, enough vaccine will be accumulated to supply everyone who applies for treatment.

Dr. Leary has a force of more than a hundred students from the Tufts medical and dental classes helping him. Many of them work late into the night preparing the vaccine for use the following day. But the supply is so limited at present that only policemen, firemen, doctors, nurses and a few letter carriers are inoculated.

It is expected that the telephone girls will next be treated, the idea being to first take care of those engaged in work of a more or less public nature before the general public is served.

District chiefs of the fire department send their firemen to the Tufts Medical School in squads of two and three. Policemen, doctors and nurses drop in at all hours of the day. Dr. Leary has four assistants on hand to administer the vaccine. There is little or no delay. The patient enters the large room on the second floor. His name is entered in a book, he takes off his coat, rolls up his sleeve and submits with a grin to the jabbing process. Then he contributes his six drops of blood.

for the corresponding period yesterday was 52.

A total of 2,412 new cases and 205 deaths in 123 towns throughout the State were reported at the State health commissioner's office today. The towns reporting were:

Fall River, 282 cases; New Bedford, 1,068 cases, 47 deaths; Cambridge, 384 cases, 21 deaths; Lynn, 270 cases, no deaths; Salem, 148 cases, no deaths; Arlington, 125 cases, 1 deaths; Lawrence, 295 cases, 7 deaths; Lowell, 441 cases, 12 deaths; Brookfield, 108 cases, no deaths; Newton, 107 cases, no deaths; Athol, 144 cases, three deaths; Fitchburg, 179 cases, no deaths; Westfield, 100 cases, with no deaths; Lee, 100 cases, no deaths.

MANY PRIESTS ILL.

More than fifty per cent of the priests of the Greater Boston diocese are sick with influenza, and many are on the dangerous list. In a number of parishes every priest has been stricken. It has been found necessary to make a large number of temporary transfers from other parishes.

The demands on the priests for attendance on the sick have been tremendous. The reports at the office of the Chancellor show that for the last three weeks the number of calls has varied from five or six in some parishes to 12 and 15 in others. In a few of the more thickly settled places some of the priests have been kept busy all night long and for days at a time have been able to snatch only a few hours' sleep. Up to date every call has been answered.

Following a conference between Dr. William C. Woodward of the Boston Board of Health, United States District Attorney Thomas J. Boynton and Judge James M. Morton, Jr., of the United States District Court, it was decided to suspend the trial of all cases until next Tuesday.

Previous to the agreement between the court and health officials, the thirty-two negroes charged with defrauding the government out of several thousand dollars by the fraudulent use of checks in serving food on the trains were called. The majority pleaded not guilty. Their cases were continued for trial.

It is also probable that applications for naturalization will be suspended as a result of the epidemic.

Only about twenty cases remain at the Colonel William A. Brooks Hospital, Corey Hill, as the tents were being removed today by the State Guard.

The tents are being shipped to Gloucester, Waltham, Haverhill, Brockton, Medfield and other municipalities where open-air hospitals will be established under the direction of the surgeon-general of the State Guard.

In the East Boston and other districts reports came today of delay in funerals of epidemic victims owing to shortage of caskets at the embalmers.

"SITUATION IS EASIER."

The situation in the epidemic today, so far as Massachusetts is concerned, is "easier," according to Dr. Hitchcock of the State Board of Health. The new cases reported were of a much milder nature, he said.

Dr. W. F. Draper, in charge of the government forces in New England, declared that the situation in the six States under his charge showed no change. Calls for help were received by him from Maine, Rhode Island, and Connecticut. Providence asked for ten doctors and 100 nurses. Dr. Draper went to Providence this afternoon to advise State health officials.

It was expected that the board of experts who have been investigating Dr. Timothy Leary's serum would report late today.

Dr. Draper sent thirteen physicians today to New Hampshire, five to Maine, three to Vermont, seven to Connecticut, and one to Rhode Island. He stated that there were now 83 doctors in Massachusetts in the United States Public Health service. He also said that he was unable to send nurses anywhere as he could not get any.

Lawrence wired the health officials today that there was no let-up in the epidemic there. Springfield reported 270 new cases and ten deaths during the past two days. Somerville sent in a report that there had been 6,500 cases there since September 25. Lowell has 454 new cases today. Brockton has erected a big outdoor hospital where fifty-three patients are being treated.

QUICK OUTDOOR CURES.

Dr. Hitchcock said record cures have been made in the outdoor hospital at Canton. There were but nine deaths among 280 children cared for there.

Congestion on the Boston Elevated system was much less during the earlier hours today as a result of the new order of Dr. William C. Woodward, Health Commissioner, limiting the hours of shopping in retail stores from 10 a. m. to 6:15 p. m. So far as the morning traffic was concerned the order succeeded in its purpose and should, it is felt, help greatly in stamping out the epidemic.

Conductors, starters, special police officials and other employes of the Boston Elevated at Dudley street and Sullivan square terminals all agreed that the riding was much more even between the rush hours of 7 and 9 a. m. than formerly. The riding was much heavier between 9 and 10 a. m. than usual.

Instead of hanging on straps when they rode on the Elevated today, girls employed in the downtown stores revelled in the luxury of seats. "Gee, this is great," said one girl to another, as she flopped into a seat. "I wish they'd keep this up forever."

"Wait until you're coming home tonight," responded her pessimistic friend. "You'll find the same old jam as before."

Employes and officials of the road looked for the real test in the late afternoon and evening riding. They feared that persons who quit work in other industries at 5 o'clock would stay in town instead of going home. This fear was expressed by persons connected with the big department stores.

ARMY MEN HOPEFUL.

There was a drop in the number of cases in the Department of the Northeast, which includes all the forts and camp defenses of New England. In the whole district, six new cases were reported today and one death.

The First Naval District reports twenty-five new cases and no deaths. Army and Navy doctors are now convinced that the influenza has spent its force.

Major Walter A. Jayne and Major Arthur E. Austin of the Medical Department of the Northeast stated today that the situation was well in hand.

Major Alvan A. Fisher, of Providence, who has been stationed at Fort Andrews, reported for duty today at the Department of the Northeast and will examine the throats and nostrils of the officers and enlisted men in that department.

Colonel William C. Cannon, department quartermaster, who was reported quite ill with the influenza, is much better today.

Church Federation for Messages of Cheer on Churchless Sundays

"The situation in which the churches find themselves placed, at the very opening of the season of aggressive work, by the closing of their houses of worship, at the request of the health authorities, is most embarrassing. But the request will be loyally heeded as a precaution against the spread of influenza, as long as it seems necessary.

"This very situation, however, affords an opportunity to use the habit and machinery of inter-church co-operation which has been developed in so many of our Massachusetts communities, especially within Greater Boston. Each local federation could and should arrange, on a Sunday when there can be no public gatherings, for the distribution to every home of a brief message of cheer and exhortation. This could be done by telephone and messengers.

"As I interpret the new movement which we have been promoting, it means that preaching is not the only reliance of the churches. Organized and co-operating, the churches may make their services to the community effective under any circumstances."

New Hours on 'L' Cars Greatly Help to Solve Congestion Problem

"The women who quit work at 5 o'clock will not go home immediately," said a man connected with one of Boston's big department stores. "Instead, they will go into the stores and hang around until it is time for the stores to close and then there will be the same old crowd.

"The new hours will mean a better condition of travel in the morning, but they will also result in late shopping and a crowd at night as of old. I very much doubt if the Boston stores will ask for a continuance of the 10 to 6:15 hours when the present epidemic ends."

Boston AMERICAN reporters who rode on the Elevated during the time the store clerks were coming in town found plenty of seats in trains from Sullivan square and Dudley street terminals. A few persons were standing in some of the cars, but there was no congestion. The same was true of the Cambridge-South Boston tunnel. Throughout the morning the street cars made better time. On forty-five-minute runs some cars were but two or three minutes late, which railway officials considered good.

Open windows on all Elevated cars and the elimination of smoking cars has helped materially. "Those smoking cars were nothing but germ nests," said an Elevated official to a Boston AMERICAN reporter, "and we are glad they have been put out of business."

The traffic is more evenly distributed, which is just what the authorities aimed at when the request was made that the stores open at 10 o'clock instead of the usual hour of 8:30.

"Between 8 and 9," said G. B. Durgin, special officer in charge of the Harvard square station, "there was not nearly as many girls going to work as heretofore. Otherwise there was no change that I could observe. Before 8 the usual crowds took their usual train to Boston."

J. E. Robinson, in charge of the Central square station in Cambridge, said, "Between 7 and 8 the traffic was about the same as usual, perhaps not as heavy, but after 8 there is no doubt that there was a more even distribution of the crowds."

Trains from South Boston were crowded between 9:30 and 9:50 with girls going to work in the big stores. However, the cars were pretty well emptied at the Washington street station and conditions for the rest of the journey to Harvard square were normal."

MISS MARY A. BURGESS, first of State House employes to enlist as nurse to fight the grip. She is a descendant of a Concord and Lexington patriot.

Miss Mary A. Burgess of No. 72 Fuller street, Dorchester, employed in the archives department of the Secretary of State of the Commonwealth, was the first employe at the State House to volunteer as a nurse to fight the epidemic of influenza. She asked for a month's leave of absence without pay, and when this was granted she entered upon her duties as nurse at Ipswich.

Mis Burges comes from patriotic stock, her great-great grandfather having fought at Concord and Lexington and her father having been captain in the navy in the Civil War.

600 Nuns Nurse Sick and Do Housework in Homes of Afilicted

It is estimated that 600 members of the various Catholic orders of Sisterhood are engaged in fighting the plague of influenza in Boston. Their plan of campaign has met with the hearty approval of Cardinal O'Connell, and he is giving them every encouragement in his power.

The Sisters of St. Joseph and the Sisters of Notre Dame are doing the bulk of the work. They have perfected a system that reaches every section of the city and lends aid to homes where the woman of the house is sick. While these two orders are doing the home work, sisters of other orders are caring for the sick in the Catholic institutions.

The home work of the visiting Sisters is arranged so that everything is attended to, from the washing of the dishes to waiting on the afflicted. While one Sister does the nursing, another takes care of the children and attends to the ordinary housework. Every morning Sisters visit the homes of sick and prepare the breakfast so that the man of the house may go to his work well fed and with the assurance that his home will be kept in order. Then the children are attended to.

At every parochial school there are cooking classes doing practical work—that is, preparing lunches for homes where mothers are sick. After these lunches are delivered, the Sisters assigned to the homes to take the places of the mothers, return and prepare supper and, through this system, the breadwinner returns to find a warm meal waiting for him and to home surroundings made as bright and cheerful as possible.

By this arrangement one Sister is left absolutely free to give her entire time to the sick person in each home, while the other Sister attends to the material comfort of the rest of the family.

INFLUENZA IS WIPED OUT AT DEVENS

Epidemic Now Thing of Past, Thanks to Activity of Camp Surgeons

Camp Devens, Ayer, Oct. 8.—Thanks to the energy, zeal and activity of the army surgeons the influenza epidemic in this cantonment is almost a thing of the past. Under the leadership of Lieutenant Colonel McCornack, camp surgeon, each individual case has been investigated, and a record made of the start and progress of the malady in that particular instance.

In that way the surgeons were able to get a line on the affection and enabled them to secure the co-operation of battalion and company commanders in spreading knowledge to soldiers of how to check the disease in its infancy by means of disinfectants.

Committees representing different fraternal bodies in all parts of the State have been in touch with stricken soldiers now convalescing and left delicacies and money in some cases.

Boston Aerie No. 45, Fraternal Order of Eagles, is anxious to get in touch with members of that body. A committee consisting of President John J. Kearney, Martin F. Cavanaugh, John Day and William L. Brown has been empowered to spend $500 to be used in looking after disabled soldiers who are members of that Aerie, according to M. F. Cavanaugh, who visited the camp today.

A committee representing the 9th Battalion today took part in the apple-picking contest at Marshall's Farm.

L Company of the 42d Infantry wants to be known as the "Boche Hounds," according to a resolution passed at the breakfast mess. The resolution also reads:

"We are going to be 100 per cent. in the Fourth Liberty Loan. Our motto will be 'Don't give if it hurts. We won't take a cent from a fellow who has to have a bunch of verbal fireworks shot at him to make him see where his interest lay.'"

A paper called the "Official Rumor" is causing a furore of excitement in the 42d Regiment. It is in typewritten form.

New Tech Mess Hall Prepared to Serve S. A. T. C. Men

The moment the government lifts the ban imposed by the prevailing influenza epidemic the large mess hall at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology will be ready to serve meals to the men enlisted in the S. A. T. C. It is three weeks since the ground covered by the mess hall was occupied by some of the minor army sheds, which have been removed, and a dining room 150 feet by sixty feet, together with a kitchen 100 feet by sixty feet, have sprung up and today are ready.

Here, as at the Walker Memorial, where the United States naval aviators are fed, Mrs. Helen H. McLean will be at the head of the management. Altogether she will be serving 10,000 meals a day. Incidental to this immense work of the restaurant department of Technology Mrs. McLean is caring for the army and navy hospitals at Technology, composed of fifty beds each, which are at present filled with influenza convalescents.

AMBULANCE DRIVER IS REJECTED BY MARINES

Although he just arrived home after driving a Red Cross ambulance on the Piave front for six months, George C. The fighting Red Cross man was dejected when he heard the verdict, but he says he is going to get into the service some way.

Shortage of Caskets Adds to Difficulties of the Undertakers

Scarcity of caskets and embalmers to care for the increasing number of bodies due to influenza and pneumonia deaths is causing a serious situation. Undertakers complain of the serious shortage of help in embalming. Undertakers are unable to fully cope with the situation, with the result that many funerals have had to be delayed. Caskets have become so scarce that in many instances, funeral directors are compelled often to wait from forty-eight to seventy-two hours before the arrival of boxes.

Richard C. Kirby, an undertaker, President of the East Boston Improvement Association, today said that while everything possible was being done to cope with the situation the large number of deaths, coupled with the shortage of embalmers, had made it a most difficult task. For competent embalmers almost any price would be paid. He has already conferred with members of the public safety committee on the situation. He has called the attention of Dr. Woodward, health commissioner, to the situation and requested him to supply a number of embalmers from Camp Devens.

Unless relief is promised by the health commissioner soon, a committee of East Boston citizens will urge action on Mayor Peters.

Will Educate the Voters

The EDUCATIONAL VALUE of the Initiative and Referendum is what Professor Frederick L. Anderson of Newton considers one of its chief advantages. He says:

"One of the great advantages of the Initiative and Referendum is that IT WILL RECALL THE MINDS OF THE VOTERS FROM MEN TO MEASURES; it will tend to make our government what the Bill of Rights insists it should be, 'a government of laws and not of men.' Politics are at a low ebb when, as is unfortunately too often true in Massachusetts, THE FORTUNES OF PARTICULAR CANDIDATES SEEM MORE IMPORTANT TO THE VOTERS THAN THE VITAL ISSUES THAT ARE PRESSING FOR SOLUTION IN THIS COMMONWEALTH. The Initiative and Referendum will quicken the flagging political interest of our citizenship by forcing real questions vitally affecting our political and social life into the foreground of attention. THE GREATEST FOE TO DEMOCRACY IS THE SELFISH LACK OF INTEREST THAT ALLOWS IT TO STAGNATE AND CORRUPT, AND THERE ARE POWERFUL FORCES IN MASSACHUSETTS WHOSE ADVANTAGE LIES IN KEEPING THE VOTERS ASLEEP. All hail the Initiative and Referendum, a measure that will make the voters wake up and think!"

This is a prediction which has been fully borne out by experience wherever the Initiative and Referendum has been tried. WITH THE INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM EVEN THE MISTAKES OF THE ELECTORATE GIVE THE VOTERS A VALUABLE TRAINING IN THE ART OF SELF-GOVERNMENT. THIS IS A MAIN REASON WHY THE CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION HAS RECOMMENDED ITS RATIFICATION BY THE VOTERS AT THE STATE ELECTION.

"MONTE CARLO" TOWN STIRRED BY CHARGES

Providence, Oct. 8. — East Greenwich, the "Monte Carlo" town of the State, where women charge the gambling ring with "debauching the good name of the town," is said to be aroused as never before as a result of a canvass made by members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Joseph W. Vaughan, president of the Town Council, says he knows of no gambling in the town.

The ousting of Deputy Speaker David J. White by the town Republican boss has caused a commotion. White says he was turned down for the nomination for State Senate because he favors State ownership of street railways as well as having endorsed President Wilson's policy during the war, all of which, he says, is against the policy of the "party."

Business men say they are tired of "gang-rule" and propose to have two issues in the November election. A. H. Esten, a prominent business man, says East Greenwich's Trinity is "Rum, Politics and Gambling" and believes it is time the residents decide in favor of continued "gang-rule or for decency." He further says:

"For years the horrible conditions have existed as a result of an understanding with the gambling ring which dominates the policy of the town government to the detriment and disgrace of East Greenwich. David J. White represents the better element of the town and will be endorsed by the law abiding residents, while the gamblers, liquor dealers and politicians will combat him because he knows it is time to further progressive legislation."

Business men smile when asked if there is gambling going on in the town and say the stock answer is to refer to the town council.

"Don't make me laugh," said J. D. A. Whalen, another prominent business man when asked about gang rule and gambling as charged by the women. "For years political trades have been made and it is time for the people to decide which they want. Residents must line up for or against gang rule and the cat will be out of the bag in November when the votes are counted," he asserts.

Thomas J. Freeman, the Republican nominee for the Senate, says he knows of no gambling in the town, and if there is, he said, it is up to the Town Council to act. Mr. Freeman said:

"I did not seek the nomination, and if the people want me in the State Senate, all right. If they don't, well, I'll go along making my living in the real estate business."

PAPER BLANKETS FOR SICK AT CAMP BROOKS

Crepe de Luxe Bedding Keeps Outt Cold and Does Not Weigh Down Patients

By HAZEL CANNING.

Enter the new crepe paper blanket.

The new blanket of crepe paper de luxe, its edges scalloped in pearl silk, and all its ways of warmth. Out at Camp William A. Brooks on Corey Hill the blanket first came into being, from the resourceful head of the surgeon-general of Massachusetts. As Dr. Brooks explains:

"These boys from the Merchant Marine here, whom we are caring for in the out-of-door hospital, need plenty of warmth. One army blanket, of gray wool, weighs four or five pounds. And the patient needs, in severe weather, four or five. That means some twenty or twenty-five pounds of covering, too much for a sick man to bear, and, besides, an expensive item to furnish, in these days of the high cost of wool."

So, exit wool troubles, achy backs of recruits, and the fear of cold. For Dr. Brooks, calling to his aid a paper manufacturer, has evolved the Crepe Blanket, of three layers of white crepe, and gray silk edging as heretofore specified.

"Tuck it between two blankets and you are warm ever after," says Jack Tar at Camp Brooks.

"Excellent idea," says Henry Howard, head of the Shipping Board in Boston, "I hereby adopt it for the Merchant Marine."

The Brooks crepe blanket has come to stay—for the American seaman. And—let's see, wasn't it our old Uncle Josh of blessed memory who used to advise all in case of cold to pad in between waistcoat and coat with newspaper.

LAUD AMERICAN FOR AID GIVEN WAR GARDENS

The National War Garden Commission has congratulated the AMERICAN upon the successful war garden contest that is being conducted. The letter follows:

"We will appreciate this co-opera- your feature by which you are finding the best experiences of the best war garden. May we not have some of the clippings from your paper of some of the best experiences?

"We all appreciate this co-operation very much, if we can use them in our nation-wide campaign.

(Signed) P. S. RIDSDALE,
Secretary and Treasurer."

Not only does the National Commission take an interest in the contest, but more and more amateur gardeners are entering into the competition for the prizes, of which there are $50 in all. The first is of $25 and the second $15. The third is $10.

BLACKSMITH DOES BIT.

Here's a letter from a blacksmith who worked four nights a week and yet had time to do his bit:

Tom Smith, High street, North Billerica:

"I am only an amateur gardener and know scarcely anything about gardening until I started a war garden last Spring. I am a blacksmith by trade and am working in the B. & M. shops. We had to work four nights a week all Summer, so you can imagine what little time I could spend in my garden.

"All I paid out for seed was $2.65, and I am sure that $75 couldn't buy what my garden produced. I planted yellow squash, English vegetable marrow peas, two kinds of beans, of which we canned six pints, and besides what we used for the table, we have a half bushel drying for the Winter.

"Then we had beets, parsnips, two kinds of lettuce, tomatoes, about ten bushels of potatoes, white and yellow sugar corn, turnips and cucumbers, of which we have pickled three gallons of the small ones, besides what we put into sweet pickle, and we had plenty for the table.

300 POUNDS OF SQUASH.

"The most interesting feature is the squash. To save space I planted them among the potatoes and corn. I have already gathered in over forty and there are still more on the vines. I have not weighed them, but I could wager that I have close on 300 pounds. The size of my garden is about [illegible] square feet. All I used for fertilizing was one barrel of hen manure and half a bag of phosphate.

"Now, if there's anyone that doubts my word, they can come right along and see for themselves. We have also canned nine quarts of corn."

Mrs. Hattie Dickinson, No. 10 Proctor street, South Framingham:

"I planted my first garden this year, as I wanted to do my bit. I had a small piece of land a block from my house, and my landlord said I might have it to plant. Everyone around said I could not raise anything so near a railroad—the land is full of cinders. I went to work with my spade and got the ground worked up and put on some dressing, then went to planting.

"I planted peas which I had ready to set out on the 15th of June. Then I planted corn, beets, carrots, cucumbers, squash, beans, tomatoes and onions. Most of my seeds were given me by another party who saved them from their garden last year. I have six big squashes which I raised from seed from a squash that I had last Christmas for dinner.

GARDEN PROVES SUCCESS.

"My garden only cost me the dressing, which was about $1; 35 cents for tomato plants, 25 cents for peas and 15 cents for onions. The rest was given me.

"I worked hard, carried water every night to wet down, as when I first planted the land was very dry and cindery. I feel proud of my war garden just the same and know the boys over there would be, if they saw it."

CAMBRIDGE REPORTS IMPROVED CONDITIONS

Although there is no diminution in the number of new cases reported in Cambridge today, the physicians of that city believe they have the situation well in hand. This feeling largely is due to the fact that the number of deaths is much less than a few days ago and the new cases reported do not seem to be so severe. The number of deaths reported is nineteen and the number of new cases 35. The deaths are for one day while the new cases cover Sunday and Monday.

She was a graduate of the Athol High school in 1917 and was in training at the Greenfield Hospital.

RELATIVES OF SOLDIERS HIS VICTIMS

Charged with falsely pretending to be an officer of the United States government and as such taking advantage of the mothers and sisters of soldiers in France, John Thibeault of Salem was arraigned before United States Commissioner Hayes. He pleaded guilty and was held in $[illegible] bail for the grand jury. In default of bail he was committed to the East Cambridge jail.

A few days ago Thibeault went to Lowell where, according to the police and the Federal authorities, he posed as Sergeant Collins of Washington, D. C.

It is charged that upon seeing a house in which a service flag was displayed Thibeault would find out the name of the soldier who lived there and would then inform the mother or sister of the soldiers that he was sick in a hospital in France and was ready to come home provided they furnished him with a civilian's suit.

Mrs. Elizabeth Mahoney, who lives on Hale street, Lowell, was one of Thibeault's victims, giving him $17 to purchase a suit for her son, who was ill in a hospital in France, according to Thibeault, and who was ready to come home provided he had the necessary suit.

Thibeault also called at the home of Mrs. Virginia Maille on Winter street and it is alleged took clothes valued at about $75, as Mrs. Maille had not the necessary $17 at the time. Thibeault later sold them to a second-hand dealer for $4.

"Sweet 16" and Liberty

MOTHERS MUST WATCH GIRLS WELL

Beatrice Fairfax Gives Advice as to How Much Freedom a Young Girl Should Have

By Beatrice Fairfax.

IF a girl is sixteen years old and works, earning enough to pay for her board and keep, how much liberty is she entitled to?

This is the text of so many letters that come to me—usually from the girls themselves—that a few generalities on the subject may be opportune. A girl of sixteen is really a child, even though the industrial conditions of the country, due to a world war, enable her to make a woman's wages for a little while.

It is the big wages that make her see everything through a magnifying glass—her age, her prospects, and the tragic condition of her breaking heart.

Duties of a Mother.

Her mother, if she is wise in her day and generation, sees to it that her daughter does not go strolling off with every Tom, Dick and Harry that comes along. For Sweet Sixteen is too young to have any real knowledge of human nature.

She is too young to have any perspective on life, and a year to her seems an eternity, and she argues: "Next year I shall be a woman of seventeen, and not have the interest in life that I have now; by that time I shall be almost middle-aged. Therefore, why should I not make hay while the sun shines? I am earning my own living, and what right has every one to treat me like a baby?"

And the mother, if she is a clever woman, will humor these old-age delusions, keeping a watchful eye, however, on her daughter, and seeing that her amusements are safe and sane. This will necessitate her keeping very much on her job as caretaker, while she dozes with one eye open and pretends not to see.

For sweet sixteen must have its good times. They are as necessary to the machinery of a young life as is the escape valve to a boiler, and if this useful tool is neglected we are likely to have an explosion. Nothing could be a more difficult and delicate job for a parent than this business of letting sweet sixteen imagine it is having its own head, while all the time a wise, kindly hand remains on the bridle.

The Age of Thrills

Sixteen is an age of thrills and enthusiasm; nothing is to be taken at its face value, the world is a place of roses, rainbows and star dust. Everything is either sunshine or shadow, comedy or tragedy, there are no halftones, no halfway values; this state of mind is reflected in the vocabulary of sweet sixteen.

It is "just crazy" about chocolate sundaes, it would "rather die" than eat oatmeal, it "adores" white uniforms, and all these exaggerated expressions are quite true; it feels that way about everything. Life is at top speed.

Alas, what a taming influence mere living exercises on these young hearts in a few years! But it is in their wild, untamed state that we are dealing with them. In the days when it is a breathless adventure to walk downtown and look in shop windows, when a movie ticket is admission to El Dorado, when the tenor in a light opera is a prince to dream about for weeks afterward.

Curiously enough, all these things, the trip downtown, the movies, the fairy prince of the light opera, become stale, flat and unprofitable when they are shared by mother, Aunt Emma or father's Cousin Jane. The beautiful soap bubble is punctured, the iridescent world of romance evaporates if some solemn grown-up invades it.

And now appears the problem for mother's ingenuity. She has got to make Sweet Sixteen feel that she is not a solemn grown-up; that she is just as young, in her heart, as any one of the girls, and is not looking at the world with the cold, weary eye of experience, but with the joyous enthusiasm of youth.

Histrionic Ability.

This is a task that will require some histrionic ability on the part of mother, who would undoubtedly prefer remaining at home, resting in the Morris chair and enjoying a book. But to keep volcanic Sixteen happy and contented is worth a little extra strain and fatigue, so the clever mother goes along, not in the capacity of a wet blanket or a rain crow, but as an—allegedly—entranced spectator.

And as long as mother has given up her comfortable evening at home she makes of the occasion a real party. She sees that several young people go along, and she does not allow her presence to act as a damper on their youthful high spirits. When they giggle and whisper over the silliest love scene she controls her disapproval or her worldly superiority. She knows these young things have just so much superfluous enthusiasm to get rid of, and she doesn't propose to tamper with the safety valve, no matter how bored she may be.

Sometimes there is a married daughter to whom this delicate mission of shepherdess may be entrusted. Any one will do who is responsible and will not act as a wet blanket on the youthful spirits. Father has been known to fill the role quite handsomely. The great thing is to get some one who will not interfere with all the giggling, bubbling, thrilling enthusiasm of Sweet Sixteen.

"The Last Day"

By NELL BRINKLEY

LOVE and I saw them, over the wind-blown, smoking crest of a sand-dune by the old gray sea. They wouldn't have minded me if they'd known I spied—no more than they do Love himself; for the sentimental artist has sold his soul to Venus' son and lost his mortality—so he may understand the language of a beating heart. Who knows but what they couldn't have seen me had they looked—no more than they could have visioned Love's invisible pink shape!

So Love and I we looked and understood. He was long and broad and had on his smooth boy-face that tragic mask that lovers close to parting can wear—a blending of rapture and dismay and bliss and utter woe. He was in the soft army-tan—a little darker in hue than the sand he sprawled on. She was a dainty feminine sturdy sweetheart, careless for once of tumbled, flying hair, intent on drinking deep of their last lark together—on her pink face the same deep look that almost mirrored his. "Strange," breathed Love, "they look at the sea instead of each other! But their hands are fast locked, and I know that the hearts in their breasts are two stones of ice and fire or two blind birds that beat and struggle to be free of pain—too big for the narrow cage of flesh they are imprisoned in!"

A great sun steeped the world of sea and sand-dune in the claret light. And the two still sat at gaze, hands clasped, all the world inclosed in a circle drawn in the sand around them. Yet knowing, humbly, that they were only two atoms in the mighty army of American lovers who are drinking the pain and joy of "last days," and holding Honor and Love to be one thing!

"GOOD."

He went out and left his nephew alone with si bitter thoughts. To his servant he announced that he was going to his office. To the chauffeur he gave the address of the Brooks home, and his face bore evidence that he had serious doubt of being admitted.

He asked for Mrs. Brooks and to his relief was ushered into the library, as though nothing had happened.

Elaine's mother was worried, but her manner showed that she had no inkling of any break in the honeymoon plans not made necessary by patriotic reasons.

"My dear Mrs. Brooks," said the cautious Mr. Blair, "I have come from Bob to explain about this sudden change of plan. At any other time it would be inexcusable, but war is war, and it's our country first—however, don't be alarmed. I am sure things will come out all right. May I see the bride for a few minutes?"

"Poor child," said Mrs. Brooks. "She's terribly upset, and no wonder, but I'm sure she'll see you. I'll tell her."

As she left Mr. Blair remarked to himself that Elaine had evidently given no hint to her mother of the real cause for the postponement of the wedding trip, and this knowledge fortified his resolve to succeed in the difficult mission—the most difficult he had ever undertaken.

Her appearance added to his difficulty, for she showed plainly the anguish she had suffered. Nevertheless, her greeting was cordial. Mr. Blair did not for a moment underrate the need of tact to the nth degree in approaching the object of his visit. He had come prepared to state his case with the greatest care, but his plans were upset by Mrs. Amos herself.

"Mr. Blair, you have come from my husband——"

He held up his hands. "Elaine, he has no idea I am here, but it's because of him I am here—because of him and of you."

"There is nothing you can say—"

"Wait a minute. There is something I can say, if you will listen to me—I can and will tell you something I have never yet told to a soul. Won't you be seated?"

Mr. Blair drew a chair near to the sofa on which she sat in a shadowed corner of the room. "When I was Bob's age," said Mr. Blair, "I fell in love with a beautiful girl with advantages of education and family somewhat similar to your own. At that time I was employed in a bank and entrusted with considerable sums for a small town.

"We became engaged and set our wedding day, when a week before the ceremony some notes were stolen from the bank and these same notes found in my room, hidden carefully in the lining of a coat.

"The young lady's father was a director of the bank, and the story as it reached her left no doubt of my guilt."

Mr. Blair paused a moment as though struggling over again with the emotions called up by an episode long passed.

"Well, she begged me to confess, declaring that her father would see that I was cleared.

"I heard her with the utmost horror. I thought of only one thing—this girl whom I was to marry in a week believed me guilty.

"Perhaps I showed this feeling, for she assured me with tears that she—she cared for me just the same."

"Elaine," he was speaking very gently, "I told her that hers was the kind of love I had no use for, and, though I was cleared by the confession of a scoundrel who had sought to ruin me, I left the town and never saw the girl again.

"My dear, in the light of years, I know now I was wrong. We are all mortal. We must make allowances for each other. No one of us can tell just how he or she would act under certain conditions. Thank you for hearing me out. And now I must run along. By the way, I expect to have a most interesting bit of news for you tomorrow. If I find I am too pressed to tell you personally perhaps you'll permit me to send a deputy."

When a Girl Marries

A NEW SERIAL OF YOUNG MARRIED LIFE

(Copyright, 1918, by King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

JIM came out of the telephone booth flushed and uncomfortable. I could see that he had a bad quarter of an hour. e didn't offer to tell me what he had said, and I, accepting again the remoteness and reserve that were as much a part of him as his generosity and extravagance and boyish sweetness, asked no questions.

He walked home slowly, each dreading the moment of taking up the routine of the past week. Ahead was the old, weary round of looking for work—unless Tom Mason renewed his offer to teach my boy the real estate business.

When we got back to the apartment, there on the marble Florentine bench in the entrance hall sat a familiar figure. It rose as I came in and a moment later I was caught in strong young arms.

"Neal! Neal! This is wonderful! Oh, my blessed brother!" I cried, accepted the miracle of his presence without question in my rush of joy at seeing Neal.

Although Jim and I had been married a month, this was the first glimpse of the network of family ties which formed the background of our lives.

Something Warm

There was something warm and homey and stable in the mere act of introducing my brother and my husband. I've always adored Neal. His high spirits, his boyish arrogance, his quick temper, his impatience with everything he doesn't understand and his eagerness to be loved and approved of are as much part of him as his merry brown eyes, wavy red-gold hair, honest freckles and the soft young mouth that proclaim him a boy even when he's trying his hardest to seem a man.

"This is a surprise, Mr. Hyland," said Jim with formality and politeness that didn't combine very well.

Neal replied with an air as elaborate as my husband's own:

"I hope it's a pleasant surprise, Lieutenant—Mr. Harrison."

My young brother readjusted himself quickly to blue serge where he had expected olive drab. But at this first reminder of his changed status Jom's face paled.

"I'm sure it's delightful for Anne and me," he said with an air of complete courtesy.

But, as the elevator whirled us up to our apartment, I wondered, with a sick sense of insecurity, whether my two boys were going to like each other!

CHAPTER XXVIII.

JUST a little while after Jim and I arrived at home and had welcomed brother Neal, Evelyn and Sheldon Blake dropped in to solve the mystery of my sudden disappearance from the luncheon at the Santvoort.

I insisted on making my apology substantial, and on substituting a coy little picnic supper for the luncheon I had deserted so shamelessly.

We had a jolly time and Sheldon congratulated Jim warmly on his escape from "the gang," as he called them. I waited breathlessly for him to suggest some other position for Jim, since I knew that he himself was down in "the street." But the suggestion did not come and Jim made no effort to invite it.

As they were leaving, Evvy gave me a startling bit of information: "Tommy has gone to his Adirondack camp for a month. He was sorry not to say good-bye—but you went chasing off so fast, Anne dear!" said Evelyn. "However, we'll all forgive you, because you saved our dear, impractical Jim and bobbed up serenely at the end of the day with this nice, new man."

"I mean," he said, "that when you leave here for Paris you will be watched day and night. The moment you set foot upon French soil you will be arrested and searched. If anything is found upon you, such as a message from your friend in Washington—well, you know what it would mean. Can't you see, you foolish child, the risk you have been running? Would you care to be branded as a spy?—you, a daughter of France?"

She struck at him. Her lace sleeves had fallen back, and her white arm, with its little clenched fist, flashed through the twilight, aimlessly yet passionately.

"You dare to call me a spy! You, John?" she shrieked. "But it is horrible."

"It is the work of a spy," he told her gravely, "to bring a letter from any person in a friendly capital and deliver it to an enemy. That is what you have done, Sonia, many times since the beginning of the war, so far without detection. It is because you are Sonia that I have come to save you from doing it again."

She groped her way back to the couch. She threw herself upon it with her back towards him, her head buried in her hands.

"The letters are only between friends," she faltered. "They have nothing to do with the war."

"You may have believed that," Lutchester replied gently, "but it is not true. You have been made the bearer of confidential communications from the Austrian embassy here to certain people in Paris whom we will not name. I have pledged my word, Sonia, that this shall cease."

She sprang to her feet. All the feline joy of her languorous ease seemed to have departed. She was quivering and nervous. She stood over her writing table.

"A telegraph blank!" she exclaimed. "Quick! I will not see Maurice again. Oh, how I have suffered! This shall end it. See, I have written 'Good-by!' He will understand. If he comes, I will not see him. Ring the bell quickly. There—it is finished!"

Page Appeared

A page-boy appeared, and she handed him the telegram. Then she turned a little pathetically to Lutchester.

"Maurice was foolish—very often foolish," she went on unsteadily, "but he has loved me, and a woman loves love so much. Now I shall be lonely. And yet, there is a great weight gone from my mind. Always I wondered about those letters. You will be my friend, John? You will not leave me all alone?"

He patted her hand.

"Dear Sonia," he whispered, "solitude is not the worst thing one has to bear, these days. Try and remember, won't you, that all the men who might have loved you are fighting for your country, one way or another."

"It is all so sad," she faltered, "and you—you are so stern and changed."

"It is with me only as it is with the whole world," he told her. "Tonight, though, you have relieved me of one anxiety."

Her eyes once more were for a moment frightened.

"There was danger for poor little me?"

He nodded.

"It is past," he assured her.

"And it is you who have saved me," she murmured. "Ah, Mr. John," she added, as she walked with him to the door, "if ever there comes to me a lover, not for the days only but pour la vie, I hope that he may be an Englishman like you, whom all the world trusts."

He laughed and raised her fingers to her lips.

"Over-faithful, you ' called us once," he reminded her.

"But that was when I was a child," she said, "and in days like these we are children no longer."

CHAPTER XXVI.

LUTCHESTER left Sonia and the Ritz-Carlton a few minutes before midnight, to find a great yellow moon overhead, which seemed to have risen somewhere at the back of Central Park. The broad thoroughfare up which he turned seemed to have developed a new and unfamiliar beauty. The electric lamps shone with a pale and almost unnatural glow. The flashing lights of the automobiles passing up and down were almost whimsically unnecessary. Lutchester walked slowly up Fifth Avenue in the direction of his hotel.

Something—the beauty of the night, perhaps, or some faint aftermath of sentimentality born of Sonia's emotion—tempted him during those few moments to relax. He threw aside his mask and breathed the freer for it. Once more he was a human being, treading the streets of a real city, his feet very much upon the earth, his heart full of the simplest things. All the scheming of the last few days was forgotten, the great issues, the fine yet devious way to be steered amidst the rocks which beset him; even the depression of the calamitous news from the North sea passed away. He was a very simple human being, and he was in love. It was all so unpractical, so illusionary, and yet so real. Events, actual happenings—he thrust all thoughts of these away from his mind. What she might be thinking of him at the moment he ignored. He was content to let his thoughts rest upon her, to walk through the moonlit street, his brain and heart revelling in that subtle facility of the imagination which brought her so easily to his presence. It was such a vividly real Parmela, too, who spoke and walked and moved by his side. His memory failed him nowhere, followed faithfully the kaleidoscopic changes in her face and tone, showed him even that long, grateful, searching glance when their eyes had met in Von Teyl's sitting room.

A large limousine passed him slowly, crawling up Fifth avenue. Lutchester, with all his gifts of observation dormant, took no notice of its occupant, who leaned forward, raised the speaking-tube to his lips, and talked for a moment to his chauffeur. The car glided round a side street and came to a standstill against the curb. Its solitary passenger stepped quietly out and entered a restaurant. The chauffeur backed the car a little, slipped from his place, and followed Lutchester.

WARTIME RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR

Actress Gives Simple Inexpensive Recipe for Streaked or Faded Gray Hair.

Mrs. Mackie, the well known New York actress, now a grandmother, and whose hair is still dark, recently made the following statement: "Gray, streaked or faded hair can be immediately turned black, brown or light brown, whichever shade you desire, by the use of the following simple remedy that you can make at home:

"Merely get a small box of Orlex powder at any drug store. It costs very little and no extras to buy. Dissolve it in water and comb it through the hair. Full directions for mixing and use come in each box.

"You need not hesitate to use Orlex, as a $100.00 gold bond comes in each box guaranteeing the user that Orlex powder does not contain silver, lead, zinc, sulphur, mercury, aniline, coal-tar products or their derivatives.

"It does not rub off, is not sticky or greasy, and leaves the hair fluffy. It will make a gray haired person look many years younger."

Home Face Peeling Becomes Popular

No complexion treatment yet discovered seems to have become so generally and so immediately popular as the mercolized wax process. Evidently the reason is that this method actually gets rid of a bad complexion, which can hardly be said of any other. To temporarily hide or bleach the defective skin with cosmetics cannot compare with the effect of literally removing the skin itself. Mercolized wax takes off the offending surface skin in flour-like particles, a little at a time, until there's none of it left. The new complexion thus produced exhibits a healthy glow and girlish beauty obtainable in no other way. This wax, which you can get at your druggist's, is applied at night in the same way you use cold cream, and washed off next morning.

Here is one thing that actually does remove wrinkles, remove them quickly, and at trifling cost. Powdered saxolite, one ounce, dissolved in one-half pint witch hazel. Use as a face bath.—Advertisement.

Tonic-Upbuilder For Throat and Lungs

In many cases of serious illness, affecting the throat and lungs, ECKMAN'S ALTERATIVE has been very beneficial. This is due largely to its readily soluble calcium content (a lime salt), so combined with other ingredients that it is easily assimilated. No alcohol, narcotic or habit-forming drugs. Twenty years' successful use.

80c and $1.50 Bottles, at all druggists or manufacturer, postpaid.

Your kidneys need help. These are signs to warn you that your kidneys are not performing their functions properly. They are only half doing their work and are allowing impurities to accumulate and be converted into uric acid and other poisons, which are causing you distress and will destroy you unless they are driven from your system.

RIVALRY AMONG PEACH STONE COLLECTORS

Thousands of Pits Turned in for Gas Masks by Young American Readers

Following the appeal of the Boston AMERICAN [illegible] the conservation of peach stones and other fruit pits for gas masks, an appeal which has now been taken up by the Red Cross, mountains of fruit stones are coming into Red Cross branches, schools and other receiving stations.

These peach stones are greatly needed for the Army to make the carbon which is contained in the gas masks for soldiers.

The Boston AMERICAN peach stone brigade of boys and girls, which now numbers some 2,000, has been very active and many barrels of fruit pits have been collected by the members.

A friendly rivalry among the members of this organization to see who can collect the most peach stones has resulted in a stimulation in the collection. Those who have sent in their totals show that they have collected peach, plum and prune stones as follows:

SOLDIERS WILL SEE LOVED ONES IN FRANCE

Hearst Plan to Send Pictures Overseas Meets With Instant Approval

Boston draft board officials are enthusiastic in their indorsement of William Randolph Hearst's plan to give soldiers "over there" motion pictures of their loved ones "over here." Under the plan "movies" of the mothers, wives and children of the men fighting at the front for world democracy will be taken without cost and sent across the ocean where they will be thrown on screens.

The pictures are to be taken by the International Film Service. Invitations will be extended to the families of Boston soldiers to be photographed. The pictures will be taken in parks, at home and near historic buildings which abound in Boston and vicinity.

Peter P. [illegible], chairman of Local Draft Board No. 4, firmly believes that the plan is a good one. "It will be great for the boys over there to see their folks on the screen. How interested we all are to see the boys over there in the movies! It will simply be reversing things. We have had a chance to see them over here and now they will have a chance to see their folks over there. It's a fine plan. It would be a good idea to have the relatives of boys in this district gather at Copp's Hill or some other historic place to be photographed.

"It would be a valuable lesson in history for many Irish, Italians and Jews photographed with Old North Church as a background, or the pictures could be made in the vicinity of Paul Revere's house. I indorse the idea."

Dr. Frank [illegible], another member of Local 4, who also acts as its secretary, said that he believed the plan a good one. He said that he would like to view a motion picture here of some of his relatives in Italy. Dr. [illegible], the third member of the board, agreed with his two colleagues in indorsing the proposition.

Another draft board official who indorsed the plan was Benjamin F. Powell, secretary of Local No. 7.

BASEBALL MUST BE KEPT UP

Would Be Fatal to Let Game Rest Next Season, According to Sam Crane

By SAM CRANE

New York, Oct. 8.—Presidents Frazee, of the Boston American League club, and Baker, of the Philadelphia National League club, have announced themselves as being in favor of continuing baseball next season with young players who are out of the draft age.

Neither of these gentlemen are at all optimistic of their prospective teams drawing patronage enough to assure a profitable season. On the contrary, they say they anticipate a slight financial loss, and would be delighted if they could pay expenses.

Messrs. Frazee and Baker have the right idea. They show that they have the future welfare of the game in mind and would not hesitate to face a loss if their venture would result in perpetuating the sport.

The very worst thing that could happen to the game of baseball would be for the club owners of the two big leagues to allow it to pass away by default. Even one year's cessation of playing or the closing of the plants in the National and American Leagues would be a very dangerous proceeding.

Instead of allowing the baseball public to be weaned from the pastime, as they surely would be if no games were played on big league ball parks, matters should be so arranged that all the parks will be kept open and a regular championship race arranged.

Interest in the sport must not be allowed to languish even a single season.

PENN STATE AT WORK FOR WASH.-JEFF. GAME

State College, Pa., Oct. 8.—With the Washington and Jefferson game assured for next Saturday by the local military authorities, Pennsylvania State's football eleven today started a hard week's work in preparation for the contest.

Coach Bezdek omitted scrimmage in order to correct the errors of the players in Saturday's practice game with the cubs. He made no changes in the lineup other than the replacement of Paul Grimmes, a recent "flu" victim at left end. Bezdek put the eleven through a dummy scrimmage in order to perfect the individual offence of the forwards.

"Rowing is done until the end of the war," Rice said, "and I want to get into the work of teaching the young soldiers how to keep their bodies in condition."

NEW OWNERS FOR THE GIANTS LIKELY BEFORE NEW YEAR

The New York Giants will likely change hands before the December baseball meetings here, it was reported today. Harry N. Hempstead, president of the club, is said to be considering a tentative offer made him by a prominent New York business man.

Controlling interest in the Giants is held by Mrs. John T. Brush, widow of the late head of the club, and by Mrs. Harry N. Hempstead, a daughter of Mrs. Brush. Minor stockholders are comparatively few, and, it is said, Manager John J. McGraw possesses about twenty shares.

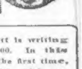
CORBETT'S CORNER



BY JAMES J. CORBETT.

This is the first chapter of a series which Mr. Corbett is writing concerning his great fight with James J. Jeffries in 1900. In this series of articles Mr. Corbett reveals to the public, for the first time, some of the dramatic and humorous features of that fight which, up to this time, were known only to his intimates.

Those who have followed my pugilistic career from the time of my first real fight in 1886 until my boxing days were over, always have insisted:

"Jim, the greatest fight you ever put up was when you met Jim Jeffries in Coney Island, N. Y., in 1900."

I was nearly 34 years old at the time—an age considered well beyond a pugilist's prime. I had engaged in only one bout in the three years previous to that clash with Jeff, and the general public had been of the opinion that I was sadly out of condition.

From the day that Bob Fitzsimmons dethroned me as champion in 1897, my one ambition had been to get another crack at the title.

There never was a day from the time that Bob Fitzsimmons defeated me in Carson City until I fought Jeff in Coney Island that I wasn't fit enough to jump into a ring with any man at a week's notice—and put up a stiff argument.

But only a few intimates knew it. The sporting world in general considered me a "has been"—and nothing more.

On that St. Patrick's Day when Fitz beat me, I asked him for a return match. But Fitz told me, "You gave me a bloody good licking, Jim, and I'll never fight you again." And he kept his resolve.

If Fitz could be influenced to believe that I wasn't in shape, I figured that he might come along with an acceptance of my many defis—and then insist upon an immediate fight.

And that's where my little trick came in: my training undercover, day after day, week after week.

Whether Fitz learned about my secret training, I do not know. But the fact is indisputable that Fitz would not give me a return match under any consideration.

Through the last nine months of 1897 and all through 1898, Fitz did not defend his title. By that time the clamor for him to "fight somebody" had become very loud.

Bob answered it by accepting the challenge of Jim Jeffries, who had come to my camp in 1897, and who served as a "human punching bag" while I was training for Fitz. Bob made the match quite eagerly because he held Jeff in small esteem.

GOLFERS PREPARE FOR OLD TIMERS' ANNUAL TOURNEY

Old-time golfers are polishing up drivers and brassies and cleeks and niblicks and mashies and things like that. They are getting ready for the annual reunion at the Wollaston Golf Club on October 16. They will be out in force and expect to make the affair what it has been these latter years—one of the big things of the season. George Wright is handling the tourney, as usual, and is anxious and ready to sign up all comers who can qualify as ancient, so to speak, devotees of the international pastime.

There Are Sharks in the Bond Business

Copyright, 1918, Star Company.

A few thousand sharks are making a business of trading worthless stocks—mining, oil, etc.—for good Liberty Bonds that have been bought by twenty million Americans.

It is said that one well-known swindler received in his mail $25,000 a day in Liberty Bonds sent by fools to be exchanged for wildcat stocks that offer a high rate of interest and are WORTH NOT A DOLLAR.

There is no better investment, nothing as safe in the world as your Liberty Bond.

Buy it, KEEP it; never sell it, exchange it or borrow on it, unless it be to get food for your family or a house for them to live in.

Of every dollar put into Liberty Bonds you ought to be able to say, "That is one dollar that always will belong to me."

Buy no security, stock or bond except under these conditions:

First, it must be listed on the Stock Exchange and dealt in by reputable brokers.

Second, it must have declared dividends without interruption for ten years or from the day of issue.

Third, you must know the property that is behind it.

And with all three of these conditions fulfilled, your Liberty Bond, backed by the Government, first mortgage on every dollar and every foot of ground in the United States, is better than anything else you can buy.

Good News Never Discouraged Anybody

The President Need Not Fear Overconfidence—The People Are Ready to Follow Him to Victory

Copyright, 1918, Star Company.

The President is reported as apprehensive lest the good news from all parts of the world's war arena may lure the American people into an attitude of overconfidence and cause them to relax their efforts in the war.

The President need be racked by no such doubts. Victory is good food for fighters, and the people of this nation, no more than any other, would be likely to slacken their efforts because the measure of triumph seemed likely to be greater than they had hoped.

But another thing may help to still the President's disquiet. The people have accepted his leadership as they have none other since the time of Lincoln.

And that leadership has steadily grown in force and vigor since the day when Mr. Wilson first put his shoulder to the wheel. He has steered with infallible instinct and indomitable courage the course between sufficient confidence to keep the spirits and hearts of the people up to the fighting point and that overconfidence that might cause laxity of effort.

We do not think anyone can point to a single utterance of the President's that hinted a doubt of the triumph of American arms.

His confidence has been from the first superb, inspiring, stimulating.

And the record of demoralization and defeat in the ranks of the foe which the last month has brought us shows the fullest justification for the President's calm confidence.

Why, then, shall we not exult in the presence of it? A winning team always plays the best.

A week in which was recorded only the withdrawal of Bulgaria from the war would be enough to arouse every ally, and particularly the United States, to its most determined effort.

For we not only want to win the war, but we want to win it quickly. The collapse of Bulgaria affords bright promise that the end may come soon.

Consider the situation on the western front. Even if Turkey were to adhere to the Central Powers, the war is still being won where it must finally be won—in the cockpit of Europe.

The Belgian army, confidence restored and recruited to formidable numbers, is pushing back the German lines in Flanders. British monitors are shelling the enemy lines on the coast in the neighborhood of Ostend and Zeebrugge.

German activity in building roads and bridges in Belgium far behind their line of battle is thought to indicate the purpose of the Teutons to evacuate that country.

St. Quentin has been taken by the allies. By this the cornerstone of the famous but ineffective Hindenburg system is displaced.

Cambrai has met the fate of St. Quentin. The Germans, in expectation of its evacuation, set the torch to the town, thus materially enhancing the bill for damages which the unfortunate German people must meet in the day of their defeat.

The fall of these two bases breaks down the right of the German line in France. Already a retreat has set in on the part of the enemy which bids fair to be hastened by the allies.

If American successes continue for the next ten days on the scale of the last ten, not only Belgium but France will be cleared of the invaders.

This is not overconfidence, but reasonable military probabilities. To attain them, American soldiers will fight as never before, and the American people will make the Liberty Loan look like a command of marines going over the top.

NOTHING WILL STOP IT.

LOOKING PAST THE HARD LUCK

It is great to be an optimist.

Ever tried it?

Hard at first to train yourself that way, but it pays in the end.

Be bigger than the trifles of every-day annoyance.

You have hard luck; you can't help it; forget it.

Don't forget the lesson involved, but forget to mourn over it.

Look ahead and see brightness in the future.

Banish regret and useless remorse.

It is misfortune or mistakes which have started most men on the road to real achievement.

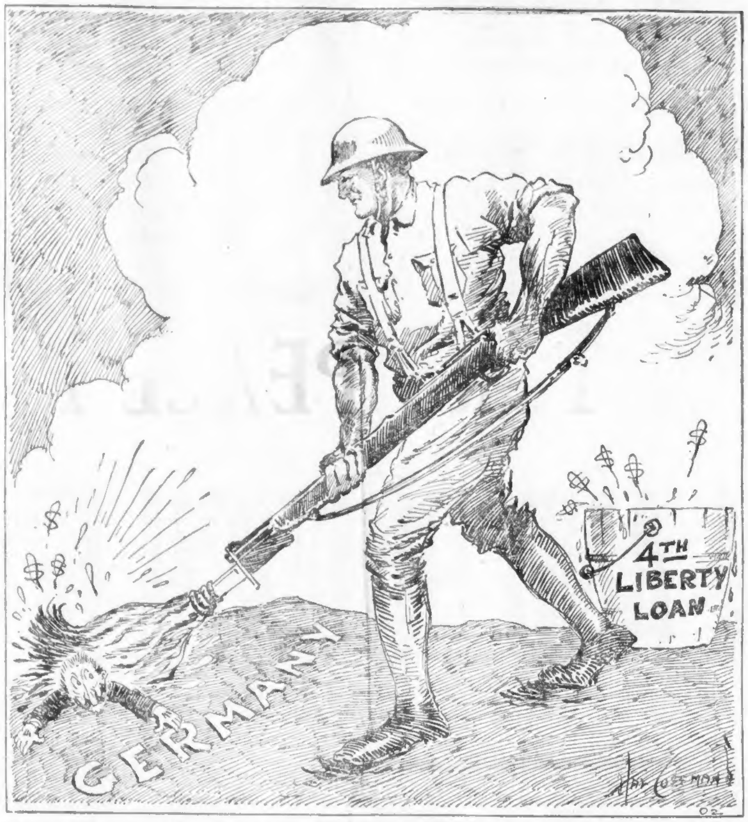
In future you may look back to your lost profits, lost position, lost friends, as stepping stones to ultimate success.

A land full of opportunities lies before you.

Have faith in your ability to grasp some of them.

You cannot be a down-and-outer while you have confidence in yourself.

Mopping Up---Help Fill the Pail



Senator Weeks and the Vote on Suffrage

The following self-explanatory letter has been received from a Boston Democrat who proposes to vote for Senator Weeks and against Ex-Governor Walsh, because of the former's recent vote against equal suffrage:

Editor of the American:

Reading your editorial of the 3rd instant, I happened to read the letter of condemnation of the way our Senator Hon. John W. Weeks voted in regard to the Susan B. Anthony Amendment. Having always voted as a Democrat, and being a deep-dyed Democrat, I can assure you and also Mr. Bauer, that I appreciate the position in which our Senator has put himself in opposing the amendment.

I firmly believe Senator Weeks voted as his constituents wanted him to vote. A few years ago the people of Massachusetts rejected Woman Suffrage almost two to one, and he abided by their decision. Even though your paper and the opinion of Mr. Bauer differ from the opinion of the majority and of Mr. Weeks, that is not sufficient reason why our Senator could have voted otherwise.

Mr. Bauer also stated he will leave the space opposite the name of Senator Weeks vacant I can assure Mr. Bauer and your paper that I will once in my life vote Republican and give Mr. Weeks my vote, and therefore he will be the gainer as Mr. Bauer did not further state his position.

I sincerely hope that you will give this letter the same publicity that you have given Mr. Bauer's, and continue your sense of fair play. I may not be as prominent as Mr. Bauer, but my vote is as good as his.

Hoping that I will have the pleasure of reading this letter in your paper, I beg to remain,

Respectfully yours,
Lewis J. Cavagnaro, Jr.,
2 Snelling Pl., Boston, Mass.

The AMERICAN has not charged Senator Weeks with misrepresenting the sentiment of the majority of Massachusetts voters in regard to equal suffrage. We do not know which side would win today if the question were resubmitted to a popular vote, but Mr. Weeks is certainly justified in interpreting the wishes of his constituents in the light of the test to which Mr. Cavagnaro refers.

What the AMERICAN insists upon is the duty of each individual voter to decide for himself which among the pending issues are most important for the nation's welfare, and then to cast his vote for the candidate whose election would on the whole do most to promote the causes in which the voter believes.

If Mr. Cavagnaro really thinks that it is more necessary to block the spread of equal suffrage a little longer than to insure the continued support by Congress of President Wilson's policies regarding the conduct of the war, the checking of profiteering, and a fair distribution of the burdens of war taxation, he should certainly step across the party lines and vote for Senator Weeks. That those who think otherwise should vote for David I. Walsh is all that the AMERICAN asks or desires.

UNTIL LAST night.
HE WAS a little mouse.
AND WE'D had him with us.
FOR WEEKS and weeks.
AND SO far as we know.
HE DID no damage.
AND WHERE he came from.
WE COULDN'T tell.
AND WE used to find him.
LATE AT night.
WHEN WE'D go to the kitchen.
FOR A little bite.
BEFORE GOING to bed.
AND HE'D be there.
ON THE kitchen floor.
AND THE first time I saw him.
HE SCAMPERED away.
AND DISAPPEARED.
BENEATH THE range.
AND AFTER a while.
WHAT FEAR he had.
OF HUMAN beings.
GREW LESS and less.
AND WE used to see him.
PEEPING OUT,
FROM BENEATH the range.
AND HIS two little eyes.
LIKE A couple of beads.
WERE SOFT little eyes.
THAT SEEMED to plead.
FOR A bite to eat.
AND TWO or three times.
I WAS sorely tempted.
TO LEAVE him a crumb.
BUT HOW did I know.
THAT HE wouldn't come back.
WITH A lot of friends.
AND THE nights went on.
AND HE stayed around.
AND GREW so bold.
THAT HE'D come right out.
WHILE WE were there.
AND TAKE his time.
WHEN WE'D shoo him away.
AND WE talked it over.
MY WIFE and I.
AND WE both agreed.
THAT IT wasn't right.
TO ENCOURAGE him.
AND ON Saturday night.
WHEN HE came out.
FROM BENEATH the range.
WE TOLD him plainly.
WE'D BOUGHT a trap.
AND WERE going to set it.
ON SUNDAY night.
AND ON Sunday night.
WE TOOK the trap.
AND A piece of cheese.
AND FIXED the spring.
AND LAID it down.
AND SNEAKED away.
AND TALKED it over.
AND STARTED back.
TO GET the trap.
AND WE'D reached the door.
AND WE heard it snap.
AND HE'S out there now.
AND WE know he's dead.
AND HE never did anything.
TO EITHER of us.
AND WE'VE murdered him.
AND HE'D been our friend.
FOR WEEKS and weeks.

I THANK you.

MISTAKE TO SIDE IN A FAMILY QUARREL

By Winifred Black

NEVER again! Never, never again! That is what I thought about it today. Tomorrow I would probably change my mind, for that is one of the things that tomorrows are for, isn't it? But today I am having a lovely time, being inevitable and determined and set in my ways, as the old-fashioned people used to say.

And it is all about Her and Her husband. I have never known the husband very well. He seemed rather an agreeable person of something more than average intelligence. He is good looking, fairly prosperous, has good manners and belongs to an excellent family, so those who keep account of every twig and every branch on the family tree are fond of saying. He has provided a rather nice little house with a good little garden on a pleasant, quiet street in a not too unfashionable neighborhood. There are three children, two boys and a girl, all of them under ten, and there is a host of friends and a lot of cousins and sisters and in-laws and things.

Amazing Turn-About

And they are always having parties for the week-end and for the mid-week, these people I know. Usually pleasant parties they are, too, with artists and musicians as a sort of dessert at dinner.

I have always thought them very happy, indeed, but one day about a year ago she came to see me and told me that it was all a hideous mistake. Her life was a failure and his a tragedy, and as for the children, she did not even dare to think of them. He was cruel and stingy and mean beyond any one's possible ideas, and now, of late, he had been deceiving her.

When she wanted money for the simplest household expenses he would not give it to her. The other day he called her names, and the day before that he insulted her mother, and the day before that he told her, oh, such dreadful things. She could never look him in the face again as long as she lived.

I was terribly shocked and surprised, but every day after that she came and every day she told me a new horror, until I began to look upon the mild little man as a perfect Nero and a terrific Hun for systematic barbarities.

And the story got around, as such stories always do, and people began to snub the man. Men did not see him at the club and when there were parties nobody wanted to go out to supper with him.

And the woman—was she pleased at the sense of justice of her friends? Did she feel that life was after all a little bit logical even if it was cruel? Not she. Do you know what she did? She flew into a temper and accused all her friends of ingratitude and took her husband's part and said people were jealous of him and that's why they were so mean to him. And now her husband thinks his wife is the only friend he has in the world and is cross with all the others because he thinks we have been unkind to her.

And there will have to be a new set of friends and a new set of ideas all around. That is why I am saying "never again" today. I do hope I am going to mean it, for this is the third time that just that sort of thing has happened to me. I ought to be old enough by this time to understand that it never pays to take sides in a family quarrel and that nobody is quite so sure of getting into trouble as the person who sympathizes too deeply with a wife against the husband or with a husband against the wife.

Does It Pay?

But all this time I keep wondering whether that woman has really forgotten all the things she told us, and what she expected us to do when she told them.

They say that the modern surgeon can tell by examination of the brain of one who lives no longer just exactly what was in the brain cells before the end came. Sometimes I wonder just exactly how the brain of such a woman as that looks—under her smart coiffure and demure little hat. I am rather glad, though, that I shall never know.

It sometimes doesn't seem to pay to be quite too intelligent, does it?

WAR'S FIRE WELDS THEIR BROKEN HEARTS

How the shattered romance of gallant Captain Warwick of Pershing's staff and his beautiful wife was made whole again by the devotion of both to their country in its hour of need is one of the pleasing features in the next

Attila and Firebug.
How to Treat a Snake.
Step on Its Head.
Wilson the Snake Killer.

By Arthur Brisbane

Begging for peace, burning cities and towns as his armies retreat in disorder, the Kaiser is a strange combination of ancient Attila and modern firebug.

Attila, who went murdering through Europe boasting that the grass grew no more where his war horse had passed, foolishly married a young woman, and that ended him.

Some said the young lady killed him with poison to avenge relatives murdered; others that he ate too much in honor of his wedding and died as other middle-aged men have done under similar circumstances.

The Kaiser—queer, complicated mongrel; a would-be world conqueror by vanity, usurer and murderer by inheritance—made his mistake when he took the crazy Bolsheviki for his political bride.

He may get peace now if he really accepts the President's program, and anything else the President may have thought of since that program was announced.

He may have to stand up and take a worse beating for a while longer. There seems no good reason why the Allies' victorious armies should grant him any armistice while his troops occupy soil taken from France and Belgium by treacherous surprise.

No matter what happens, whether peace be delayed or negotiated now, the world sees the end of the Kaiser and Kaiserism, and the Kaiser knows it.

He and his line, his divine right, preposterous claims to world rulership, are at this very moment a part of the past, as extinct as the dodo, the great auk or the hairy mammoth. That mammoth also thought that brute power could rule. It was mistaken; so was the Kaiser.

There isn't the faintest doubt that Prussia wants peace, must have it. The news of the "indescribable panic without precedent that has broken out on the Berlin stock exchange tells what Germany thinks of Germany's condition. Germany thinks that nothing German is worth owning just now.

And on the Berlin stock exchange Germans, vying with each other in the effort to get rid of securities that are German, cut prices to nothing, showing what they think German properties are worth.

His war, in which the Kaiser, talking of glory and changing his uniform like a vaudeville quick-change artist, thought to gratify his maniac vanity and steal the property of other nations as his ancestors had stolen from their benefactors, was, in plain English, a money-making war.

From great nobles at the top to German Socialists at the bottom Germany enthusiastically followed the Kaiser on his expedition of thievery.

The land and property of the world to be stolen and divided among the Kaiser's dear Prussians.

And the United States, politely described as a nation of storekeepers, was to pay untold billions to the Kaiser as an indemnity in return for peace.

That must sound like a rather poor joke to the Kaiser now, as he remembers his bragging, his contempt for this country, which, he said, wouldn't dare fight, and couldn't send soldiers to France anyhow.

Now with his helmet in his hand, looking over his shoulder in terror of his own people soon to rise against him, he approaches Woodrow Wilson, makes his appeal directly to America, saying:

"I accept your terms; let me have peace."

Murder does not pay any longer on this earth, not even wholesale murder carefully planned and plotted for forty years, as was this war, begun by Prussia and soon to be ended by the United States.

When you see an adder, run over by a heavy wagon, writhing in the roadway, making no progress, you see a snake that cannot live long—its back is broken.

When you see Prussia, in panic, from the Kaiser to the stock gamblers, from the stock gamblers to the retreating Prussian armies, you see another snake with its back broken, and you know that it cannot live.

But a venomous snake can poison you as long as there is any life in it. The careful steps on its head and crushes out the remaining life.

Woodrow Wilson is a careful man.

You will read the President's answer to Prussia soon, perhaps in the newspaper that publishes this.

Meanwhile, the nation is not losing time. Three new gigantic ammunition plants have just been ordered.

And the American citizen worthy of the name, is investing his money in Liberty Bonds that will pay for those plants and pay for the war unselfishly begun and soon to be gloriously ended.
